Japan's Next Wave of Centennial Heroes Builds the Future

By the 1970s, Japan was no longer the emerging market that had changed so much since its founding. After a century of economic, scientific, and cultural growth, it was now being regarded as a developed nation. It was building its world-class products on a foundation of new building for the future. The Japanese government was now building for the future. The Japanese government was now building for the future. The Japanese government was now building for the future.
